

KING DAVID VICTORY PARK LEGACY

For more than six decades, King David Victory Park was home to generations of students, families, educators and staff who helped shape a very special community. While the campus closed its doors in December 2025, its legacy and its people remain an important part of the King David story.

The spirit of Victory Park continues through the students and staff who have successfully integrated into their new King David school communities. They carry the friendships, values and sense of belonging that were so much a part of their Victory Park experience.

We have created this legacy page to preserve and celebrate the history of King David Victory Park. Here you can explore the school's history book, browse annual yearbooks, watch videos and revisit the people, milestones, traditions and memories that shaped the campus over the years.

This is a living legacy page, and we will continue to add stories, memories, photographs and tributes that celebrate the people, moments and spirit of King David Victory Park. Keep checking back as the story continues to unfold.

Victory Park may no longer exist as a physical campus, but its legacy lives on through its students, alumni, families and staff, and within the wider King David community.
